There are many amino acids, and one cannot stress enough the importance of having proper amounts of them in your diet. Whether a limiting nutrient such as a BCAA or one of the many other types of amino acids, all are important for general health as well as physical goals such as building muscle or losing fat.*

Amino Acids & BCAAs - Bodybuilding.com

Of the essential amino acids, three account for as much as 33% of muscle tissue - leucine, isoleucine, and valine. These are called Branched Chain Amino Acids, or BCAAs. Here's a breakdown of each: Leucine is arguably the most important BCAA because there's clinical evidence that shows it helps your body synthesize protein.. Aim for 2-3 grams of leucine per day for optimal protein synthesis.

The amino radical, $\cdot\text{NH}_2$, also known as the aminyl radical or azanyl radical, is the neutral form of the amide ion (NH^-). Aminyl are highly reactive and consequently short lived like most radicals; however, they form an important part of nitrogen chemistry. In sufficiently high concentration, amino radicals dimerise to form hydrazine. While NH_2 as a functional group is common in nature ...

Although a healthy diet provides us with the necessary vitamins and minerals for proper body functions, sometimes the amount we get from our food is not enough. Lack of enough vitamins is characterized by feeling a little short of energy, fatigue, and constant headaches. One of the best ways to replenish vitamins and minerals is by taking multivitamins.

Urine is a liquid by-product of metabolism in humans and in many animals. Urine flows from the kidneys through the ureters to the urinary bladder. Urination results in urine being excreted from the body through the urethra.. The cellular metabolism generates many by-products which are rich in nitrogen and must be cleared from the bloodstream, such as urea, uric acid, and creatinine.
