Daimyo, Sengoku Hidehisa. From the 12th century to the 17th century, Japan was dominated by a delicately-balanced, feudal-military system led by daimyos who controlled competing semi-autonomous domains. Daimyos were essentially warlords whose power was based on the strength of their private armies.

The Sengoku Period was perhaps the most dynamic period in the military history of the samurai. Changing technology and ideas combined to minimize ageless tactic and ideals. The samurai himself was ultimately to be minimized, his great presence reduced by ranks of common foot soldiers with gun and spear.
